

HITLER SPEAKS OF THE NEW POWER OF THE GERMAN NATION

His Proclamation Temporarily Shelves the Czech Autonomous Dispute

WAGNER READS SPEECH

Says World Economics Will Perish If Productions Are Destroyed, Not Increased

(By International News Service)

NUREMBERG, Germany, Sept. 6.—So powerful she henchforth will be quoted as a friend rather than as an enemy, Nazi Germany has emerged from "political and economic isolation," Adolf Hitler told the Nazi party Congress today in a proclamation which temporarily shelved the Czech autonomous dispute.

The only clue to new Nazi expansion and plan were afforded by Rudolph Hess, Nazi leader, who in a brief address said that "all state actions of the Fuehrer will be blessed by the Almighty."

Hitler's own speech, read by Adolph Wagner, governor of Nuremberg, praised German economic independence, vigorously attacked international Jewry, lashed out at Bolshevism as an instrument of world destruction, and warmly applauded Premier Mussolini for expulsion of Jews from Italy.

Criticizing the "empty" phrases of Democratic statesmen and predicting world economics will perish if productions are destroyed instead of increased and accumulated, the Fuehrer said: "Our economic activities will always be guided by this resolution: National security first. Only then will German defense forces be in a position to protect the freedom and interest of the Reich."

"Only then will Germany be of greatest value as friend and ally of every one."

"If I say that on the occasion of the tenth party Congress, it is in the firm knowledge that politically, as well as economically, the period of Germany's isolation is over."

"I step before you not with a new pact, but with seven new German provinces from my own country (Austria). Hitler complained that the world had lost understanding for his task. In spite of this, he described how he had built up the Nazi party and finished a thorough survey of the party's struggle against "Marxist International Jewry."

Rapping foreign forces that Germany is growing economically weaker, the Fuehrer said the Reich's only weakness consisted of a shortage of labor.

The bride was Miss Rita M. Romaine, 23, of 2365 S. Eighth street, Camden, N. J., and the groom, George W. Smith, Jr., 25, of 1709 Brill street, Philadelphia, president of the Mercury Association.

Standing on either side of a white motorcycle which had been placed beneath a flower-decked white arch on the lawn, the bride and groom took their vows. Beside them were their attendants, Mrs. William Demmel, 1520 Fairmount avenue, Philadelphia; and John Cashman, Hotel Marlyn, Philadelphia. ## THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

He is "One of Us" Too

Washington, Sept. 5.

THE nomination for Senator in California of Mr. Sheridan Downey on a platform promising everybody $30 every Thursday has been widely referred to as a crackpot victory—and so it was. However, only a few of the minor Administration spokesmen have joined in that characterization, and it will be noted that Mr. Roosevelt, while deploring the rejection of his personally endorsed candidate, Mr. McAdoo, found comfort in the comment that "after all" Mr. Downey has "the liberal point of view."

NOTHING COULD more perfectly illustrate the complete degradation to which the word "liberal" has come. We have reached the stage where the cheaper and more shabby the demagogue, the more certain he is to take high rank among the professional liberals of the day; the louder his claims to represent the "liberal viewpoint" and the more aggressively he mouths the word. If the above quoted remark of the President means anything, it means that he is sympathetically supporting a candidate whose sole claim to consideration is his espousal of a plan which in the cruelty of its deception of the ignorant poor is more wickedly absurd than any yet put forth in this country.

BUT, WHY NOT? It is entirely logical that he should. It will be recalled that Mr. Harry Hopkins, who certainly has the "liberal point of view," whose generosity with the public funds knows no limit and whose closeness to the President exceeds all others, back in 1934 clasped to his bosom the ineffable Mr. Upton Sinclair and told the world that "he is one of us." Even without Mr. Roosevelt's endorsement, this makes Mr. Downey "one of us," because Mr. Downey was closely linked with Mr. Sinclair in his campaign, ran on the ticket with him, firmly believed with him in the great EPIC plan to abolish poverty. The $30-every-Thursday idea is merely the natural outgrowth of that noble notion.

AS A matter of fact, the $30-a-week plan simply carries the New Deal policy of dishing out the Federal dough in all directions to its logical extreme. Moreover, it is

ONLY THREE CORRECT ANSWERS SUBMITTED

One of Limericks Appeared to Be Difficult to Those Who Sent in Missing Line

ANNOUNCE WINNERS

Three lucky individuals are Miss Mary Rita Blanch, Mrs. John Wilson, and Miss Roberta H. Pearson, all of Bristol. For these three were the only individuals who last week submitted correct answers on one of the limericks appearing in the contest sponsored by The Bristol Courier.

And in that order, based on neatness, are checks being forwarded to them. Miss Blanch, of 159 Otter street, receiving $3; Mrs. Wilson, 242 Wood street, $2; and Miss Pearson, of the same Wood street address, $1.

"High sea, change your tune to B flat." This was the line that "stumped" so many limerick fans. Many of the devotees of the contest had all of the words, but transposed them in every conceivable manner. Among some of the manners in which the last line was worded, were: "Change your tune on high sea to B flat"; "Change a tune to high sea for B flat"; "Tune your high sea! Change to B flat."

The complete limerick is: An onboard enthusiast sat In the bow of a craft christened Seat. When his boat struck a swell, Folks ashore heard him yell—

High sea, change your tune to B flat. The words for the final line were found in advertisements of: Marty Green's Army & Navy Store, Factors-to-You Furniture Store, J. S. Fine, Wolson's Hardware Store, Hardy's Shoe Shop, Auto Boys, Checker Stores, Spencer's.

The winners of the prizes for the second limerick are: Charles S. Orr, 613 Pond street, $3; Marion Spadacino, 913 Cedar street, $2; Mrs. Leslie Strumfels, 560 Bath street, $1.

This second limerick with its correct last line follows: A soprano while singing a song, Held one note a trifle too long. She attempted to stop, But her voice wouldn't drop. Till the "rest" of the "staff" came along.

The words for the last line were discovered in advertisements of: H. B. Eastburn & O. Grupp, Wetherill Service Station, Greenlee's Station, Weed Chevrolet Company, Dowden Engineering Company, A. B. Shoemaker & Son, Bucks County Sales & Service, E. T. Pincen.

Many in endeavoring to discover the correct way to put these words together had made the line read: Till the "staff" of the "rest" came along.

One Bristol Township resident, this week decorated the envelope in which she sent in her limerick answers, by writing names of the advertisers in green ink.

Another limerick fan wrote his answer in red crayon to make it more colorful.

Two more limericks are in today's issue of The Courier. Get in the fun.

CLAY-FOOT HEROES

Never before in history, until last week, has the French Republic paid official homage to Napoleon Bonaparte, according to a press dispatch, which goes on to record the unprecedented gesture, the dedication of a monument to the memory of the Little Corporal at his birthplace, Ajaccio, Corsica. Paradoxically, the occasion was not only in honor of Napoleon, but also an opportunity for official repudiation of the principles for which he stood.

"It is dangerous for a state to rest upon a single man," said France's navy minister, Cesar Campinchi, who turned the dedication of the monument to the soldier-emperor into an object lesson in defense of democracy. Incidentally, the presence of the navy minister at this historic ceremony, is explained by the fact that the unveiling preceded the inauguration of a powerful naval base at Aspreto, Corsica, which represents France's latest move to counterbalance the power of Italy in the Mediterranean. Thousands of troops and sailors participated in the ceremony at Ajaccio, while warships of the French Mediterranean fleet thundered salute. When the thundering ceased, the soldiers and seamen listened while the cabinet minister said to them, and to the world, as he pointed to the Napoleon monument:

"Certainly a democratic regime may have its weaknesses, but what are they compared with the dangers of uncontrolled power? Liberty, peace, and the future of a nation are too precious to be delivered to one man—even an exceptional man."

"M. Campinchi recalled that Napoleon himself once declared: 'In time the sword will always be beaten,' and the navy minister concluded that Bonaparte's words are worthy to be remembered, 'at a time when certain men profess disdain for liberty and a desire to outlaw certain traditional values which have always assured the nobility of man in our western civilization.' He did not name those 'certain men' but the strategic location of the spot on which he stood made clear his meaning.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol Feb. 3, 1877. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

J. Monroe Shellenberger, Esq., our new district attorney, commences his duties as prosecuting officer with this term of court. The position is one of great responsibility requiring energy and care as well as promptness and impartiality in seeing that the interests of the people are well taken care of, and that the course of justice is protected. Mr. Shellenberger brings to the office an earnest purpose that his duties shall be performed with courage and integrity.

The new public school house which is shortly to be erected at the corner of Washington and Pond streets, will be quite an addition to the school facilities of the town. There has as yet been no definite plan agreed upon as to the character of the building, but from consultations upon the matter which has been held by the members of the school board, it is understood that the new building will be of brick and of about the same capacity as school No. 2. There will be two rooms, one up and one down stairs, and if it is found necessary these will each be divided so as to make four rooms, each one of which it will be the design to have under the control of one teacher, instead of having two teachers in one room, as is now the practice. It is also the intention, if the school board agrees in the matter, to do away with the basement as a school room at the Wood street school house, when the new edifice is completed.

HULMEVILLE — Notwithstanding the stormy weather last Friday evening the hall of the Y. M. C. A. was filled with people who had come thinking to hear a lecture as had been previously announced. J. W. McDowell, Esq., who had been engaged for that evening was unable to be present. The president, Mr. E. G. Harrison, appointed Mr. J. H. Knight to arrange an impromptu programme for the evening! It consisted of music, recitations, and a short discourse on phonology by Rev. Mr. Brinklee. Mrs. Anna Perry, being requested, recited "The Lost Child" in a manner appreciated by the audience. Some excellent music was rendered by the Mozart Glee Club of Philadelphia, led by Mr. E. Reetz, of the borough.

The Rev. John C. Brooks, pastor of St. James Church, was on Sunday morning, ordained to the ministry. Bishop Saeveus performed the ceremony, and the candidate was presented to the Bishop by Rev. Dr. Butler.

preceptor at the Philadelphia Divinity School, where Mr. Brooks graduated. Rev. Arthur Brooks, New York, a brother of the pastor of the church here, preached the sermon which was an able and thoughtful discourse, and was listened to with close attention by a large congregation. In the evening the confirmation of a class of 18 persons drew together a crowded congregation. Over 600 people filled the body of the church, and some persons went away for want of room.

Mr. and Mrs. James Smith will celebrate the 40th anniversary of their marriage by a variety wedding on Friday evening, 16th instant.

The 22nd of this month is to be celebrated with a firemen's parade, on which occasion the fire brigade of Hughes & Co.'s mills, will house the old hand engine. This company, which is known as No. 3, is to have fatigue caps, red shirts and white belts. They have engaged the Independent Band of Bristol to furnish music for them, while of the other companies, Nos. 1 and 2, who have agreed to participate in the parade, the former has engaged the Newtown Band, and the latter the Washington Cornet Band of Bristol.

only a little less economically unsound. Actually, Mr. Downey makes the same basic appeal to the same people that Mr. Roosevelt makes. The difference is one of detail and degree, not of principle. They both have the "liberal point of view" and as soon as they recover their equilibrium the minor New Dealers, now disposed to shudder at the crudeness of the Downey proposals, will discover, with Mr. Hopkins, that he is "one of us." The truth is that the failure of the "purge" upon which they have so confidently counted, and which is now so mortifyingly obvious, apparently has affected the sense of direction—never very strong—of some of the more eminent of the Administration advisers.

FOR EXAMPLE, one group thinks with the President that, while Mr. Downey's plan is slightly cockeyed, "after all," he has the "liberal point of view," and the thing to do is to support him. On the other hand, some of the really radical spokesmen who usually reflect the inner White House circle recently have denounced the Townsend Old-Age Pension Plan (which in comparison is very sound indeed) as "far to the left of the New Deal." No one, of course, can follow this sort of reasoning. It merely bears out the fact that the whole Administration is enveloped in confusion and the only coherent policy is that of keeping the money flowing. If anything can be amusing under such circumstances, it would be the indignation of the Townsend leaders at having their plan referred to as "left of the New Deal" by the New Deal radicals.

AND THEY are very indignant indeed. They do not think you can get "left of the New Deal." In the current issue of the Townsend National Weekly, official organ of the movement, the following tart reply is made: "Now, the word 'left' in its political sense connotes a radical program, something socialistic or so visionary as to be unsound. If the Townsend Plan is to the 'left' of the New Deal, then it must be radical to insist on not piling up the national debt; to insist on pay-as-you-go recovery, to advocate a uniform tax program, fair to all. And by the same token, it must be 'sound' and 'conservative' to increase the Government's pile of I O U's, to lend the credit of the Government to private bankers and then borrow it back, to support the millions on relief when jobs might be created instead—not by Government fiat but by the law of supply and demand."

IT DOES seem that the Townsends have the better of this argument. Their plan may be unsound, but it is neither as silly nor as cruel as the thirty-dollars-a-week-Thursday idea whose sponsor the New Dealers undoubtedly will support against the conservative Republican in California. The Townsend leaders might also have cited in their reply that some of the strongest of the New Deal Senators, high in the White House favor, have now publicly pledged themselves to the Townsend Plan and owe their seats to the Townsend vote. Senator Claude Pepper, of Florida, is one. In the light of these things, the Townsend indignation at being termed "left of the New Deal" is not surprising. It is another indication that Administration spokesmen have lost their sense of direction and badly need co-ordination. They do not know what they are doing and they have not known for a long time. In years to come we will look back upon this period and wonder if we were all crazy not to have more fully recognized the facts.

SYNOPSIS

Edward Fowler, a reputedly wealthy gambler, searches Durlin Bessinger's suite at the Hotel Pescador, Miami Beach, for evidence to substantiate the latter's claim that he is a wholesale grain merchant. In a trunk, Fowler finds letters to that effect, but though mailed from different points all appear to have been typed on the same machine, leading Fowler to believe that Bessinger had written them himself. Why had Bessinger gone to such lengths to establish himself in the grain market? What was he covering up? In the desk drawer Fowler finds a mysterious verse in German which in English reads: "One more than a ten, but less than a jack. Show your hand to get the pack." Several days later, at the Sunset Bridge Club, Glen Neal, a society reporter, questions Toby Munroe, the proprietor, about Mr. and Mrs. Bessinger. Toby refers him to their "friend," Fowler. At the time, Fowler is playing bridge with Millie La France, a sophisticated blond. All of a sudden she starts shouting, accusing Fowler of deliberately causing her to lose. He quits the game, gallantly pays Millie's losses and leaves. Toby takes his place. The other players are Ben Eckhardt, with a reputation for finiteness with women and cards, and Dave Button, who claims Fowler owes him $60,000. At 4:15 A.M., two hours after the club had closed, a mysterious figure unlocks the back door and slips inside. After searching all around, the prowler comes to the poker room where his flashlight reveals the body of Fowler slumped on a table with a knife stuck in his back. "I thought so," said the intruder. "Just what I figured. Dollars to horse-collars, they've bumped off the wrong guy." An anonymous telephone call notified the police of the killing. Police Captain LeRoy goes to the home of Doris and Donald Buchanan to enlist the aid of their boarder and friend, Miles Standish Rice, a private detective, in solving the murder.

CHAPTER V

"Fowler was seated at the poker table with his back to the door of the room. He'd been dead less than six hours according to Gaines—no signs of rigor."

"Had he been playing poker?" Stan showed a blue eye. "I didn't ask him." The Captain failed to resist the temptation. "I don't think he had."

"You should have asked him," Stan closed the eye. "Were there cards and chips on the table? Any glasses? How were they arranged? How many chairs were around the table? Why don't you think he'd been playing. I thought policemen never thought."

"There were four packs of cards and a number of ivory chips in a mahogany rack on the table. The cards were unopened. Fred is checking the place for prints."

"The chairs?"

"Just one—where Fowler was sitting. Another reason I doubt there was a game."

"You think he was sitting there talking to somebody and was stabbed in the back by another person? That makes two or more guilty."

"I rather had that in mind, Stan," the Captain said thoughtfully. "He couldn't have been afraid of anything. A man who's nervous doesn't sit with his back to a door."

Stan swung around, sitting up, and looked at LeRoy. "What about the phone call this morning? Doc Gaines thinks this fellow had been dead several hours. Why should the murder phone several hours after he'd killed someone?"

"Who said the murderer phoned? Do murderers make a habit of calling the police?"

"It's an old habit—I'm quoting an official named Vincent LeRoy."

"Ouch!" The Captain smiled apologetically. "I think I see what you mean. If it wasn't the murderer who phoned—"

"I don't get it," Stan declared. "How the devil did old man Farraday get mixed up in this?"

LeRoy scratched his head. "It sounds garbled, Stan, but you've opened up an interesting line of investigation. We can't trace the call. It was dialed."

"That's a pity," Indian Creek lay flat and shimmering before the house. Stan could almost feel the heave of a motor boat; the quick, painful thrill of a sailfish nosing the murderer—who ever it was must have been in the club between the time of Fowler's death and the time of the phone call. If that's the fact—someone let the phoner in—or the phoner has a key to the club—unless the phoner was in the club while the murder was committed, and stayed there until the time of the phone call."

"Just what I figured. Dollars to horse-collars, they've bumped off the wrong guy." An anonymous telephone call notified the police of the killing. Police Captain LeRoy enlists the aid of Miles Standish Rice, a private detective, in solving the murder. LeRoy explains that the fabulously wealthy Bruce Farraday will pay plenty for the solution as he, his son Tolliver, daughter Eve, and Mrs. Lydia Staunton, a friend, were at the club the night of the crime. In Fowler's room, the police found Tolliver's torn check for ten thousand dollars made out to Fowler. The murder weapon was a circus knife.

CHAPTER VI

Mr. Bruce Farraday's suite at the Royal Palms was quite in keeping with the luxuriousness of the hundred thousand dollar Swampfire moored to the docks below Mr. Farraday's windows. A six foot secretary, answering dutifully to the name of Weems, admitted Stan Rice and Captain LeRoy. Stan was somewhat at a loss to picture such a pugilistic individual, as Weems, engaged in the sedentary task of transcribing Mr. Farraday's weighty dictation.

The packer shook hands cordially, mentally estimated Stan from a glance from small, rather friendly eyes, and indicated chairs. Seated, he managed to dismiss Weems and indicate a buffet supporting bottles, ice, and soda, by half waving a well-mannered hand. Stan, who admired conservation of energy, and well-stocked buffets above all things, warmed immediately to the millionaire.

"Captain LeRoy has probably told you that I'm in a difficult situation, Mr. Rice," Farraday bit off his words, but terseness could not hide the worry and trouble in his voice. "I have nothing whatever to hide. The police have found a check, signed by my son, in the room of a man who was murdered. 'Captain LeRoy tells me that you, and your son and daughter, all played at the Sunset Club last night. I was wondering if you had ever been there before.'"

"Is it his check?"

Farraday hesitated, glancing from Stan to LeRoy. "It's on his bank, and the signature looks like his—but he's just a boy, Mr. Rice—twenty-two. He has never had ten thousand dollars."

Stan got up and walked to the buffet to study the labels on the Scotch. "Hadden't we better have him come in?" he asked.

"He and his sister left early this morning to drive to Fort Myers with friends. There was no word of this then. They'll return this evening."

"Oh!" Stan selected a bottle and poured two drinks. He knew LeRoy never touched anything while on duty. He felt that some of Farraday's natural cautiousness might be dissipated under the warmth of the golden liquor. The packer was a man well trained in dissemblance. Stan was certain of that—and equally certain that Farraday's air of ingenuous frankness was concealing facts which he should reveal for the protection of his own son.

Stan added ice and seltzer to the drinks, and asked casually: "Are you and your children on very friendly terms, Mr. Farraday?"

Farraday's smile was almost fearful. He countered with another question as Stan set the drink on the desk before him. "Can any father answer that, Mr. Rice? My children have been motherless since Eve was born—twenty years ago. I love them devotedly. I've tried not to give them too much, but perhaps I have. They have been away from me—school and college. He sank down lower in his chair, tugging the lapels of his pongee coat into place.

"I trust we are on friendly terms, Tolly and Eve are all that I have."

Stan raised his glass and waited for his host to follow suit. Farraday straightened up, and seemed to see his highball for the first time. He queried LeRoy, courteously, about his not joining them. When the Captain explained, with a grin, about duty and pleasure, Farraday turned to Stan: "I'll drink to your assistance, Mr. Rice. I hope you will help me."

"I'll do my best," Stan said. They drank together. Stan set his glass down and lit a cigarette. "Captain LeRoy tells me that you, and your son and daughter, all played at the Sunset Club last night. I was wondering if you had ever been there before."

Again Farraday hesitated before replying. "We hadn't. An old friend of mine—Mrs. Staunton—came down on the Swampfire with us. We started to play on the boat last night and she suggested the Sunset Club might be an agreeable change. We were all rather tired of playing with each other—shifting money around in the family."

"You always play for money?" LeRoy put in.

"Yes—but not over a cent a point," Farraday gave a quiet laugh. "The burden rather falls on me—although my son and daughter do insist on paying me out of their allowances when they lose."

"And Mrs. Staunton?" Stan watched the bubbles rise in his glass.

"She's a wealthy woman in her own right. Naturally we play on a basis of strict sportsmanship. She is quite able to hold her own at bridge. I quit to see where she enters into this."

Stan leaned back in his chair and relaxed. "There are numerous things, Mr. Farraday, that both of us fail to see. You sent for me through Captain LeRoy because your son is involved in a particularly nasty murder. It's doubtful if anyone without your standing would have received the same consideration."

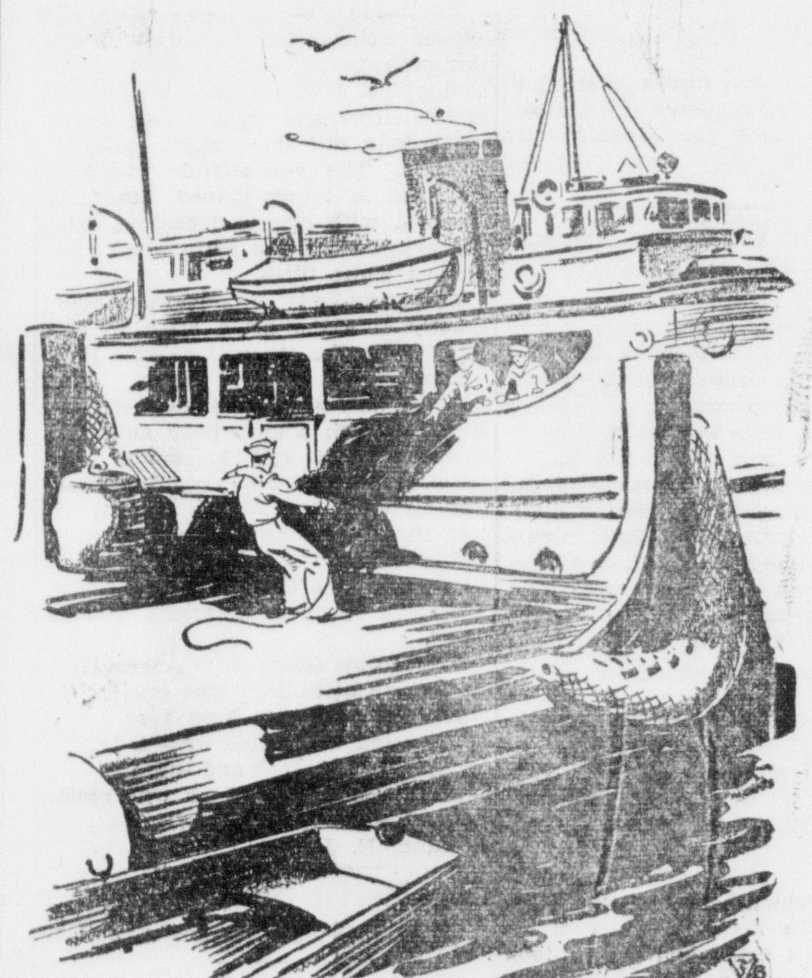

Farraday interrupted, but Stan raised one hand to stop him. "Let me finish, please. When I'm through you can tell me whether, or not, you want me to handle this for you. Edward Fowler, the murdered man, was known to Miami gamblers as a high stake player, willing to take a chance on anything. Captain LeRoy told me that much on the way here. Unless that check bearing your son's name was an out-and-out forgery—your son must have known Fowler. At least that's what I believe, and I think the police will agree with me."

LeRoy, listening intently, gave an affirmative nod.

"If that's the case," Stan continued, "the boy, undoubtedly, had been gambling with Fowler. You may not have known that. I don't believe you did. But I do believe you knew your son was addicted to gambling. That's what has you so worried now. The best thing you can do, Mr. Farraday, is to tell us the truth. I won't try to help anybody, when I'm kept in the dark."

examination. Thirty-eight per cent of the licenses issued at Doylestown last month went to residents of the Trenton section and other parts of New Jersey.

A total of 208 marriage licenses were granted in the month of August this year compared to 169 licenses in August last year, an increase of 39 in one month, indicating the marriage license business is really on the up-grade.

During August, 1934, before the three-day marriage license law went into operation in Pennsylvania, the total for the eighth month was 216, a record that has never been matched.

During September last year there were 164 marriage licenses granted and it is quite likely that during the present month of September more than 200 licenses will be issued.

A checkup of the returns in the office of the Clerk of Orphans' Court for August also shows that nearly 75 per cent of the applicants were married by Justices of the Peace.

The applicants in August came from ten states, including New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Maryland, Delaware and Pennsylvania.

Seventy per cent of the applicants granted in August were to non-residents of Bucks county. About 60 per cent of the female applicants had occupations other than housework. Licenses were granted to thirteen divorced women and fourteen divorced men. There was no great disparity in ages of those granted licenses, but there were two male applicants over 50 who had never been married before.

LOOKING FORWARD

By Franklyn Waltman
Publicity Director, Republican National Committee

In one of the many small parks which dot Washington, alongside of one of the Capital's busy thoroughfares, there is a large bronze statue of a seated figure, leaning forward tensely, the face peering with some concern, as though trying to see what lies behind the veil of the future.

The figure is a replica of Samuel Gompers, a part of the memorial erected in honor of the first president of the American Federation of Labor. Gazing on the bronze statue one wonders what Samuel Gompers, the old man of labor, would think were he living today.

For Samuel Gompers undoubtedly did more to promote the organized labor movement in this country than any other man. Where other men had failed, he succeeded because he seemed to have an inner sense, an intuition of the wise and smart thing to do. In his long years of struggling on behalf of labor, he won the respect and admiration of a great part of the country. He brought to the American Federation of Labor a moral prestige which in later years proved to be its greatest asset.

It was Gompers' wisdom and great vision which steered the American Federation of Labor away from the shoals of partisan politics. In 1894 he risked his prestige and his standing within the A. F. of L. to battle successfully against the adoption by the Federation of a socialistic program of political action. Indeed, though he won that war, he lost a battle for he was ousted for one year from the presidency of the A. F. of L. because he made the fight.

Although Gompers kept the A. F. of L. aloof from taking sides in partisan politics, he realized the necessity for organized labor to concern itself with governmental action to protect its economic interest. He inspired in 1906 the Federation's policy of rewarding its friends and punishing its enemies—a policy which today remains the A. F. of L. policy.

Gompers would not have been in sympathy with the political activities of John L. Lewis and his C. I. O. cohorts. Were he living he would have been shocked over the members of organized labor being assessed to place approximately $500,000 in the campaign war chest of a political party. Had he been living, without doubt he would be wrathful over sit-down strikes, attacks on the Supreme Court, regimentation of labor by a government board with powers to compel observance of its decrees.

Thus William Green, now president of the A. F. of L. in expressing his opposition to such events is acting in the Gompers tradition. He, like his illustrious predecessor, is following a path of economic statesmanship, rather than one of demagogic, partisan politics. In the years ahead he will be remembered for saving the organized labor movement at this time, just as Gompers is remembered for saving it in the nineties.

How do we know what Gompers would think about all this were he alive? Inscribed in the bronze on his memorial are three quotations expressing the Gompers philosophy.

"No lasting gain," reads the first of these quotations, "has ever come from compulsion. If we seek to force, we but tear apart that which, united, is invincible. There is no way whereby our labor movement may be assured sustained progress in determining its policies and its plans other than by sincere democratic deliberation until a unanimous decision is reached. This may seem a cumbersome, slow method to the impatient but the impatient are more concerned for immediate triumph than for the education of constructive development."

The second of these quotations reads thusly:

"So long as we have held fast to voluntary principles and have been actuated and inspired by the spirit of service, we have sustained our forward progress and we have made our labor movement something to be respected and accorded a place in the councils of our Republic. Where we have blundered into trying to force a policy or a decision, even though wise and right, we have impeded, if not interrupted, the realization of our aims."

And the third quotation reads: "Say to the organized workers of America that as I have kept the faith I expect that they will keep the faith. They must carry on. Say to them that a union man carrying a card is not a good citizen unless he upholds the institutions of our country and a poor citizen of our country if he upholds the institutions of our country and forgets the obligations of his trade associations."

John L. Lewis is not the only man who, on Labor Day, should have read and pondered those words. Franklin Delano Roosevelt also might read them with profit.

the Grand Theatre. Comedies don't come any funnier than this musical saga of a cowboy who never rides the range because he's scared to death of horses.

With the exception of a few sentimental interludes and some musical moments every minute of this production, which features Pat O'Brien, Dick Powell and Priscilla Lane, has at least fifty-nine seconds of hilarious comedy, with the result that the opening day audience roared with laughter almost continuously from the first scene to the last.

It is a fast-moving farce, with songs introduced occasionally but always as a logical step in the plot, which revolves about the amusing misadventures of a singer. Some of the songs are old cowboy ballads, but there are also five new tunes every one of which gives definite promise of being a big hit. The reviewer liked particularly the songs entitled "Ride, Tenderfoot, Ride" and "I'll Dream Tonight."
